EDHD Courses
EDHD 1100 Intro to Human Development	Overview of the psychological, biological, familial, and cultural factors related to human development across the lifespan including major research findings and their real-world application. Course further reviews professional ethics, public policy, and exploration of career options including a career interest inventory.
EDHD 2100 Service-Learning 1	This is a service-learning course with a minimum 80 hr placement in a human development setting aligned with a student's area of interest and targeted career. Assignments and activities build an understanding of the profession and responsibilities within that profession.
EDHD 3100 Research Methods	An introduction to the techniques of research in the study of human development. Students develop skills in reading and understanding empirical research, specifically methodology, assessment, evaluation, and statistical issues. As part of the course, students identify their targeted career path and propose a related capstone project. Prerequisite EDHD 1100 & 2100
EDHD 3200 Service-Learning 2	This is a service-learning course with a minimum 120 hr placement in a human development setting aligned with a student's area of interest and targeted career. Assignments and activities deepen experience in the profession and may either increase responsibilities, or may explore opportunities in related areas of interest. Prerequisite EDHD 1100 & 2100
EDHD 4100 Human Development Capstone	Students conduct an action research project in the human development field aligned with their area of specialty based on work done in Research Methods. The project will include producing a summary report and performing an oral presentation of findings. Prerequisite EDHD 3100
