Galloway, NJ – The Constitution Day series of programming at the The Richard Stockton College of New Jersey, part of Stockton's Political Engagement Project, continues with a pre-election forum entitled "What's at Stake in the 2012 Election?" Featured participants in the forum include members of Stockton's Political Science faculty.

The event takes place in room C-134 here, 4:30 p.m. on Thursday, November 1, 2012. It is free and open to the public. Panelists include Stockton faculty members Bill Daly, Alan Arcuri, David Carr, Mac Avery, Michael Rodriguez, Tina Zappile and Linda Wharton. Each member of the panel will make brief comments on areas of political expertise. Topics will include the economy, foreign policy, the federal courts and Supreme Court, among others.

Constitution Day, sometimes referred to as Citizenship Day, is an American observance that recognizes the adoption of the United States Constitution and those who have become United States Citizens. It is observed on September 17, or on the closest weekday to September 17 when that date falls on a Saturday or Sunday. However, Stockton celebrates Constitution Day with a semester-long series of events and activities.

The mission of the Political Engagement Project at Stockton is to promote the skills, understanding and motivation of students in their own political engagement, whether in the community, public policy or electoral politics. This is a non-partisan project aimed at encouraging political discourse among students, peers, faculty, and administration as well as civic action in all forms with the goal of increasing students' life-long political engagement.
